Development of Registration Systems for Qualification Holders

Hosted by Social Work Research Institute, Japan College of Social Work

It is necessary for social workers to have competence and respond to issues in their respective fields. In the past, governments attempted to address social problems through policies and institutions. Such social problems affect the lives of people and are characterized by their individual character. Under these circumstances, there is a need for joint collaboration and cooperation in the Asia Pacific Region. This can be achieved by exchanges in research and education based on mutual understanding of unique social contexts.

This seminar tries to clarify the actual conditions and challenges of social work education in the Asia Pacific Region, including the most recent development of registration systems for qualified professionals. We aim to capture the current characteristics of the Region as a whole and to mutually learn from in each specific context.
